About the Graduate School of Film and New Media Doctoral Program in Film and New Media Studies

Overview

In today's world where image-based creative expression and image-related technological innovation are developing at the same fast pace, there is a demand for artists and researchers who possess a broad, organized knowledge of images. Film and media is a field of study that has as its central themes the pursuit of image-based creative expression that incorporates a high level of contemporaneity, and the development of methods of expression and fundamental techniques. As part of the social demand for learning, it is hoped that the role played by images within the culture and the potential for their future development will be clarified, and that the expertise previously limited to the experiences of creatives will be converted into knowledge capable of being shared publicly.

Tokyo University of the Arts Graduate School of Film and New Media, a truly unique forum for creative production, provides an environment for deeper theoretical and practical research. The respective members of the faculty involved in the Master's Degree Program at the Department of Film Production, Department of New Media and Department of Animation are also involved in lectures and seminars for the Film and New Media Doctoral Program. Leading and assisting members of the teaching staff provide each individual student with continuing support. The program provided by the department includes, as the academic year progresses, presentations to research societies and the submission of a doctoral thesis, following a preliminary review based on the outcome of each student's academic activity. Research methods leading to the submission of a doctoral thesis are broadly divided into either theory-centric or practice-centric. Results using a theory-centric method are presented in a thesis in the traditional way. In the case of a practice-centric method, however, results are presented in the form of an exhibition or screening, as well as a complementary thesis. The practice-centric method has proliferated in recent years in doctoral programs all over the world, especially in the field of the arts. In either case, a review is conducted by a committee that includes experts from outside the department, which is a reflection of the complex nature of the field. Graduates of the program are in highly specialized positions as university faculty members, independent researchers and archivists.

Course completion requirements

The Graduate School of Film and New Media Doctoral Degree Program takes at least three years to complete and students complete the program by obtaining the prescribed number of credits, and, with direction provided by members of the teaching staff, passing the review of their doctoral thesis and the examinations.

Please note that a review of a student's works may be included in the review of the doctoral thesis, depending on the nature of the research subject.

Academic degree

Students who have completed the Doctoral Program in Film and New Media Studies at the Graduate School of Film and New Media are conferred with a Doctor of Philosophy (Film and Media) or Doctor of Philosophy (Arts and Sciences) degree.

Student selection

The competency and the quality of the work produced by applicants who are already experienced in working in an artistic sphere will be evaluated to determine whether they possess the necessary ability to undertake research at a consistently high level during their time in the Doctoral Program in Film and New Media Studies. The research outcomes (academic papers, publications etc.) of researchers will also be evaluated, as well as the level of their skill in communication, to ensure that they are competent to undertake research.

Please note that applicants will be required to submit an actual research plan.

Admissions policy of the Graduate School of Film and New Media (Doctoral Program)

The Graduate School of Film and New Media seeks students who are able to undertake in-depth theory and practice-based research and take advantage of the unique qualities of on-site creative production. The entrance examinations comprehensively assess the applicant's activities to date and evaluates his or her ability to undertake research and bring that research to fruition.
